Big baby costume

GeekBaby is viking this Halloween. I'm really pleased with his suit, it looks great. Kind of like a combination between authentic and fantastic attire. I knit the hat from a kit available from BellaKnitting.com I did it had for him to wear to the hospital, and he was the inspiration for the rest of the suit. I know the Vikings weren't wearing horned helmets, that's one of the fantastic elements. The chainmail shirt is made of (I think) wet lame. Silver on black background fabric. It also does not require hemming (score!). I made the edging out of some woolie looking ivory fleece and fake suede to look like a shearing tunic under the post office. The belt is a strip of the fake suede sewn around the periphery of the tunic. It's too big, so it won't go up much. In colder weather I would put a simple white, long-sleeved onesie under the tunic to keep him warmer, but the mantle was sufficient to keep him warm in our 60+ degree evening weather. This is probably also mostly fantastic, but it looks good. The pants and the cloak are fleece - great because they are both warm and don't need to be cornered. I hate twisting. The cloak is attached to the chainmail shirt with buttons - I didn't want to have ties near his neck - and the buttons are reminiscent of the pins historically used as links to Viking clothes. I chose the colors red and green because they were also used in viking clothes. It has no weapons or shield because I didn't have time to do them and because GeekBaby is still too little to hang up stuff. I could do some next week before Halloween, so I'll update this slideshow. Amazon To make your baby's first Halloween one for books (in your memory, anyway), you need to go well beyond a basic pumpkin onesie when it comes to costume choices. Let's face it-your little one is only going to be this little, caressed, and willing to be dressed in whatever you choose for so long, so why not make the most of it? Whether you want to DIY your baby's Halloween costume or shop for a ready-made outfit online, we have many adorable, affordable, and comfortable ideas. Celebrate your first October 31 as a family or take your little trick-or-treat out style with these baby girl and baby boy Halloween costumes. Your heart will flutter once you see your infant as a pineapple or teddy bear-or have a good laugh while paraded a mini Bob Ross or Princess Leia through the neighborhood. And if you want to put your baby in a pumpkin and take a picture, we support you. Don't let the newborn out of the older brother or couples coordinating suit this year either-you could dress your baby as Hedwig to coincide with your DIY Harry Potter theme costume, or Turn into a mini lobster as you and your husband play chef.
